

EDITORIAL POLICY

There is a neglected body of research involving tests of the validity of theories, methodologies, and data used in previously published studies. There is also a need for more articles that synthesize the literature on important topics, particularly those topics that bridge several disciplines.

Accordingly, the Quarterly Journal of Business and Economics as an editorial policy, will place priority on the following kinds of articles:

1. Studies that reexamine important empirical works, using either a different set of data or an alternative empirical or theoretical framework. Such replications should emphasize extension of the original results or determination of their generality and should not merely repeat the work.
2. Studies that test important theoretical works and shed additional light on the issue.
3. Surveys that review and evaluate critically the literature. These articles should examine a theoretical, methodological, empirical, or policy issue from the perspective of a particular field or from the viewpoint of several fields.

Four copies of all manuscripts should be mailed to the Quarterly Journal of Business and Economics, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, 200 College of Business Administration, Lincoln, NE 68588-0407.

Each manuscript must be accompanied by a $25 submission fee. Individuals submitting manuscripts will receive a one year subscription. Articles accepted for publication after January 1, 1989 must be submitted on disk using Microsoft Word or compatible software. (Authors failing to meet this requirement will be charged a small additional fee.)

Manuscripts will not be returned unless the author encloses a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Subscription and per copy rates are $10 per year and $4 per issue.
